MONTPELIER.

Council Meeting Lasted Till Midnight,
Alderman Thomas Opposing Measure.

The city council meeting last night proved an exciting one, which lasted until midnight. The principal cause of trouble was the opposition of Alderman Thomas to the set of specifications drawn up by G. H. Almon, the board's electrical expert, and City Attorney Bailey, to be presented to certain fire alarm companies regarding the new system for Montpelier. Mr. Thomas' principal objection was that the council was asking what the companies would do instead of telling what the council wanted. He was voted down after a spirited debate, and the draft was accepted. It was voted that the state road be built as far as possible on River street and that the street committee act as it saw fit for the remainder of the distance. This came up because Frank Doucette petitioned for some kind of a road so that mail might be delivered to some 19 houses in that vicinity. It was voted to assume the $15 charge of the committing Sylvester Mahoney to the insane asylum. Capt. Pattee reported that the East State street station was in bad shape; but could be changed into a central fire station for approximately $500. He was ordered to go ahead with the changes.

A horse belonging to a man from East Montpelier way was shot yesterday by officials of the Washington County Humane society.

There is talk of forming a Maine club here, the members to be former residents of that state, and a meeting has been called for to-morrow night to discuss the proposition.

AMUSEMENT NOTES.

"Naughty Marietta" Made a Hit at Worcester, Mass., Recently.

"Naughty Marietta," which appears at the Barre opera house Friday evening, October 27, made a hit in Worcester, Mass., as indicated by the following from the Worcester Telegram of October 24:

"Naughty Marietta," a comic opera which took Broadway by storm last season, was presented by Oscar Hammerstein's company at Worcester theatre, yesterday afternoon and last night, and received the stamp of approval of the audience at both presentations.

The opera has the spirit of a renewal in popular favor of the musical treats in vogue a dozen years ago. It is a different type than the usual standard of to-day, rich in good music, and designed to be presented along the lines of art, rather than on the plan to entertain at any cost.

The dash and vivacity of Victor Herbert's composition is evident in "Naughty Marietta," and Rida Johnson Young's book is interesting.

The story is that of a young Italian countess who, prompted by love of adventure, goes to New Orleans in 1780 with a shipload of girls, who are sent by the king of France to be married to the colonists. The romantic countess, who is unable to conceal her identity, has many adventures; the greatest of all that of winning the heart of a confirmed woman hater. The character demands constant display of a lively, impulsive spirit, some neat dancing, and singing of rich music.

Miss Florence Webber, in the title role, won favor. John Cardo, in the tenor role, demonstrated that he has an excellent voice.

The main melody of the opera was "Italian street song," which was sung just before the close of the first act. It has a fascinating swing and dash, along the Herbert order, although in musical construction it is a new departure from his former operatic work. A quartet in the second act, and the comedian's song with the chorus toward the end of the opera, were especially bright.

There are pretty dances running through the opera, and the costumes were attractive.

In the Sewing Room.

There is a right way and a wrong way to sew, and she who pursues the right way arises from her sewing after a day's work greatly benefited. She may be weary, but her weariness is that derived from healthful work, like the weariness which follows a game of tennis, for instance, but the woman who habitually takes the wrong position runs a great risk of developing indigestion, to say the least, if not more serious lung trouble.

It may surprise most women to learn that it is not conducive to good health to sit in a rocking chair while sewing if the material has to be kept on one's lap. A rocking chair throws the body out of balance by pitching it backward and at an unnatural angle. In it the muscles of the front of the body—the chest and diaphragm—are contracted, the chest is made hollow, the ribs are pulled down, and the back is rounded.

A chair with a straight back should be used, and the body should be held in the same erect position that the cutting table requires—chin and abdomen in, back straight, chest out. Of course, it is necessary when sewing on the lap to bend forward, but the bending should be done from the hips—the back should not be rounded. Sewing at the machine properly conducted is an admirable exercise. Be sure to sit erect, bending only at the hips, and you will find the rapid pedaling will be beneficial as a healthful exercise.

Correct sewing is really governed by a few simple rules, which, if followed out, make the plying of the needle and thread an exercise which deepens the chest, improves the carriage, strengthens the back and shoulders, clears the complexion, and brightens the eyes.

In the first place the sewing room should be well ventilated. The air in it should be as fresh and pure as the air out of doors. Three operations go on in the sewing room—viz: cutting, the seamstress standing at the table, stitching, seated at a machine; sewing, with the material in the lap. In cutting the manner in which the seamstress bends over the table is everything.

The following exercise taken two or three times a day is a wonderful help toward correct bending at the work table, that is, bending without constricting the chest or abdomen. Stand perfectly erect with the heels together, the chin and abdomen in, the chest out, the back straight. Slowly filling the lungs with air, raise the arms, held stiff, from the sides outward, until the hands meet over the head, and at the time the hands meet, the lungs should be filled to their fullest extent with air. Slowly exhaling the air, lower the arms to the sides again. Repeat this movement twenty times.—Exchange.
